Géry Langlais The Perfect Light

*Géry Langlais at Les Artisans, Gustavia
Opening reception, Friday, February 3, from 6pm-8pm*

Artists at Work

Art is once again in the spotlight, with an exhibit by Géry Langlais opening this week. His paintings are pastels that capture the old-school quality of the island. He spends a few months in Saint Barth every winter and it is interesting to watch him work, and see how a blank sheet of paper transforms magically (it seems) into a lovely pastel drawing. But don't let your eyes fool you, the color shading is complicated and the oil pastels take a painstaking effort to perfect. His show opens on February 3 at Les Artisans and runs through February 23.

More artists will be showing their work at the Christopher Hotel in a one-night, open-air Art Party on February 7, as organized by Artists Of St Barth, a group of local painters, photographers, and sculptors who have also opened a gallery in the former Pati St Barth shop in Villa Creole. If you don't have a gallery, why not create one, so they did, and it's worth a stop in some afternoon to check out the variety of work on display. They can also be found on Facebook.

Super Bowl LI. Lady Gaga. Tom Brady is back! Check out our list of places that will be showing the ultimate in American football on Sunday, February 5. I'll bet you a double cheeseburger that either Atlanta or New England will win!

See you around the island,

Ellen Lampert-Gréaux

NEWS BRIEFS

ENGLISH LANGUAGE BESTSELLER BOOK CLUB

Every two weeks during the winter season, a group gets together in the Anglican Church Centre to discuss a current bestseller or literary classic, every other Monday evening from 6pm-7pm. There is a fun and convivial atmosphere, so if you have read or intend to read any of the following books, do join us for "Hot Milk" by Deborah Levy on Monday February 13. The following book club meeting will be on February 26 (possible books: "The Sellout" by Paul Beatty or "White Tiger" by Arakind Adiga). For additional information: info.stbartholomews@gmail.com

SBIPOA NEWS

The Saint Barth International Property Owners Association kicked off the 2017 season with a members-only cocktail party at Camp David, and will continue its activities with a fund-raising luncheon on Friday, February 10. Proceeds from the event will benefit the Coral Restoration Project as spearheaded by Didier Laplace. The organization, whose goals are preserve and protect the quality of life, act as a central source of accurate information, and be involved in the community of the island of Saint-Barthelemy, has also launched a Facebook page at Saint-Barthélemy-International-Property-Owners-Association, which provides information about meetings, fund-raisers, and other events.

ZIKA SCARE DIMINISHED IN ST BARTH

According to local reports, the Zika virus scare has subsided with the island now in Stage 4, indicating the end of epidemic levels. However, it is recommended that people continue to wear insect repellent and remove all stagnant water around houses that can serve as breeding grounds for the mosquitoes that carry the virus.

KONA AND RICHARD WIN AQUATHLON ON JANUARY 22

Kona Hosier, known for his skill as a Nantucket Bay scallop fisherman, was on the winning duo, with teammate Richard Ramassamy, in the Saint Barth Aquathlon held on January 22. Kona swam the 2 x 500 meters, while Ramassamy ran the 2 x three kilometers, as one of 18 teams on the starting line. Kona was the only American in the race.

Géry Langlais: THE PERFECT LIGHT

If there is one thing that French painter Géry Langlais likes, it's perfect light, something he sets out to capture on a regular basis. Getting ready for his seventh annual exhibit at Les Artisans, which opens on Friday, February 3 with a cocktail reception from 6pm-8pm, Langlais has visited just about every corner of the island, and has new paintings of Eden Rock, Vitet, Saline, Shell Beach, Anse des Cayes, and Marigot, among others.

Langlais works in pastels, which he says "capture the light, giving my work a luminosity I like." On his first visit to Saint Barth, Langlais was captivated by the colors and landscapes of the island. "They inspired me like Brittany does," he notes, adding that in Brittany he also paints primarily nature, landscapes, and houses, not too many people. "I am an architect who loves houses, it's a natural reaction," he says. Brittany continues to provide his summer canvas, while he spends part of each winter in Saint Barth, where he is charmed by the island's landscapes—and immortalizes them in his pastels of various sizes, with deep blues of the sea, a fiery orange sky, rocky terrain, sandy shores, and an abstract view of St Eustache on the horizon.

Langlais' process is to do preliminary sketches before finalizing the drawings in pastels. "I like to capture the ambiance of the afternoon, night scenes, and the light in interiors," he explains. "I also like to capture the light between dusk and twilight, that adds a magical touch." At Les Artisans, Langlais will show a series of local landscapes, inspired by the island of Saint Barth, illustrating the magical nature and light that has captivated this artist. He also enjoys portraying the amusing shapes of some of the large rock formations that seem almost sculpted into animal shapes, such as in Vitet.

Langlais uses soft pastels as well as oil pastels, the latter requiring more work, especially in blending colors, yet rendering the colors stronger and providing a denser intensity to the work. Both styles convey his love of the island, from the early morning light to the glimmering moonlight that tantalizes his eye as he captures the soul of Saint Barth.

THE SWEDISH BATTLEMENTS OF FORT GUSTAV

Vestiges of the Swedish era can still be seen in Saint Barthélemy, including the battlements that remain at Fort Gustav. In the century that the Swedish flag flew over the island's rugged terrain—March 7, 1785, the date the first Swedes arrived, through March 16, 1878, the date of the island's return to France—there were several forts built overlooking the harbor in Gustavia as protection from foreign invasion. The Battlements of Fort Gustav are registered on the French national list of historic monuments.

While several battlements (1) were built during the earliest French period on the island, it was the Swedish who developed a serious system of defense, comprising three forts and battlements strategically placed near the entrance to Shell Beach. The three forts are Fort Oscar (formerly Gustav Adolf), Fort Carl, and Fort Gustav. All access to the town of Gustavia was this protected from potential invaders attracted by the wealth of this duty-free port, supply base on the route to the West Indies, and anchorage for numerous vessels. Built between 1786 and 1787 on the ruins of two French battlements Fort Gustav was the first Swedish fort to be built and was also the largest. It is also the only one of the three registered as a Historic Monument with visible vestiges that can be seen today. The fort comprised stone ramparts, a main building, a cistern, a powder house, two sentry boxes, and a bakery. Its location and orientation at the north end of town ensured simultaneous control over the bay in Public as well as traffic in the harbor of Gustavia, and a deterrent for the population de Gustavia. At the foot of the ramparts, a covered path, still visible, wound around the fort. A covered terrace with rotunda built of paving stones for the artillery, the main building, and the bakery were above. Even higher was the stone pillar erected in honor stele of lieutenant August Nyman. At the end of the path was one of the sentry boxes (there was a second one but it was destroyed when the weather station was built on the site in 1952). The cistern was built of vaulted stone. The redoubt (2) was built on the highest point of the site, where there was a second terrace. This elevated point was also where various lighthouses were located (the current one dates from 1961). The powder house (3) is still extant, but altered, and located between the redoubt and the artillery terrace. It has a thick roof with pointed exterior form to help reflect projectiles. The vaulted interior is lined with brickwork. Since 1952, the site of Fort Gustav houses the Météo France weather station, which was redesigned in 2004 and baptized Espace Météo Caraïbes. The site belongs to the French government but an agreement to transfer the property to the Collectivity is under consideration.

- (1) Battlement: A fortified structure with artillery
(2) Powder house: In military language, the powder room is the place where gunpowder for canons was stocked, and by extension munitions and explosives for military use.

ART PARTY AT CHRISTOPHER HOTEL

Artists of St Barth have announced that their next Art Party will be on Tuesday, February 7 at the Christopher Hotel, starting at 7pm. The event includes performances and an exhibit of work by local painters, photographers, and sculptors at Mango and by the hotel pool. Food, drinks, and parking are available.

This non-profit association also has a permanent exhibit by local artists at Pati's Gallery, Villa Créole, Saint Jean, open daily from 4pm-8pm. For additional information: 06 90 73 45 73 or facebook.com/artistsofsaintbarth

KICKOFF FOR SUPER BOWL LI

When the Atlanta Falcons line up against the New England Patriots in Super Bowl LI on Sunday, February 5, 2017 at NRG Stadium in Houston, TX, folks on Saint Barth have lots of options to watch the kickoff. Check out the menus at 25 Quarter, La Cantina, and Bar de l'Oubli in Gustavia, head up the hill to Santa Fe in Lurin, head over to Nikki Beach in St Jean, or Le Guanahani in Grand Cul-de-Sac. The kickoff is at 6:30pm EST, which is 7:30pm in Saint Barth. Can Matt Ryan of the Falcons out-throw Tom Brady from the Patriots, or will Brady take home his fifth Super Bowl ring? Ribs, burgers, and beer are sure to be on the menu for this highlight of the American football season. And stay tuned for the Half-time Show featuring Lady Gaga.
